

SO MUCH TO DO, SO LITTLE TIME!

01/30/2018

We've all had "those days"! Waking up in the morning already tense thinking about all the things we "have to get done today". It just seems like there won't be time to get everything running through our heads accomplished--but it all has to be done!

Sometimes we can relate those days to poor planning on our parts. We've had 60 days to get our vehicles emission tested and now, here it is, the last day of the month and we will be driving illegally if we don't get it done today. Or, possibly, we have duties at work that now have to be done today--because we didn't do them yesterday, or the day before, and the deadline has arrived.

It seems to be human nature to put off doing the things we really don't want to do until the last minute. Most of us are fairly good at making excuses as to why we haven't started on a project or accomplished a task before the last minute. They may be good excuses--but excuses will not allow us to put off doing the undesired task any longer!

Most always, though, we look back at the end of those kinds of days and are pleased that we did accomplish what needed to be done. And, even if we didn't get everything accomplished we had set out to do, the end of the world didn't happen because of it!

What I hope is that no matter how busy we are, or make ourselves believe we are, that we can still take the three seconds to smile and say "hello" to someone as we go through our hectic days. Or maybe we're trying to cram in a quick trip to the grocery store, that we really don't feel we have the time to do, and an elderly person needs help with his/her purchases. Can't we take the extra 5 minutes to be the kind stranger that makes a difference in that person's day?

Life, to me, is a continuous journey of service to others--no matter what I may be experiencing. God, or whatever you choose to call the "Creative, Loving Power Of The Universe", will see to it that we have the time to help others. No matter where we are employed, or how hectic we believe our lives are, if we are aware that our "real jobs" are helping others and believing in Divine Right Action and Outcomes we will be more than Ok! I believe, whole heartedly, that's why we are here on this plane! Everything else will take care of itself if we live our lives are a service to God and others.

So, today, no matter what you may have on your plate, please take the time to be thankful for your life and take the time to be a ray of sunshine in someone else's life. You'll be better for it--and so will the world!

God bless--

All my best--

Chip
